CASE STUDY

Bespoke Electric Heating and Concealed Ductwork for a Child-Focused Event and High-Profile Art Exhibition

Temporary event heating is about more than keeping a space warm. For two simultaneous events at a well-known Manchester venue, comfort, discretion and the positioning of equipment were equally important.

One was being used by children. The other was hosting a high-profile art exhibition.

Both needed a warm, comfortable room, but neither wanted the equipment to become part of the experience.

The Andrews Heat For Hire team provided DE 190 Electric Heaters with bespoke black perforated ducting, creating a discreet way to distribute warm air.

1 CHALLENGE

For the child-focused event, the heating equipment needed to remain hidden, with ducting secured along the ceiling to keep it away from the occupied area.

The art exhibition environment was central to the visitor experience, so heating equipment had to remain unobtrusive without compromising the display.

With both events running simultaneously within the same venue, the heating arrangements needed to accommodate two distinct layouts and sets of requirements.

2 SOLUTION

Our specialists supplied DE 190 Electric Heaters for both event spaces, combining high-capacity warm-air delivery with bespoke black perforated ducting.

The ceiling-level ducting provided a discreet route for distributing heat in the child-focused space, whilst the black finish helped the heating arrangement blend into the art exhibition environment.

By adapting the distribution arrangement to the surroundings, the team addressed the heating requirements without allowing the equipment to dominate either space.

3 OUTCOME

Both events received temporary heating and bespoke black perforated ducting that distributed warm air throughout the spaces rather than concentrating the delivery at a single outlet.

Andrews Heat for Hire engineers met the different priorities of both customers: keeping heating equipment discreet and ducting secured at ceiling level for the children's event, while preserving the visual presentation of the art exhibition.
